Administrative history / Biographical sketch

Note

Harold Cressy (1889-1916) was an education activist, teacher, and civil rights activist. He was also the first coloured person to obtain a degree in South Africa. Cressy was born to Bernard and Mary Cressy and was one of five children in Rorke's Drift, Natal. Cressy received his primary education at the Roman Catholic Mission School in a small town called Melmoth in Zululand. Cressy moved to Cape Town at the age of eight, graduating from Zonnebloem College in 1905 and earning a T.3 certificate that qualified him as a teacher.

Cressy worked at the Dutch Reformed Church mission school in Clanwilliam in 1906 as a principal. He was simultaneously studying towards his matriculation certificate in 1907. The Department of Education offered him a bursary to study and he applied to the Rhodes University College. His application was accepted, but he was denied entry for racial reasons when the University found out he was a coloured man. He then applied to the Victoria College at Stellenbosch, now known as the University of Stellenbosch, and he was rejected for similar reasons.

Dr Abdullah Abdurahman, President of the African Political Organisation (APO) used his influence to get the South African College later known as the University of Cape Town to accept Cressy's application to study. In 1910 Cressy obtained a Bachelor of Arts degree making him the first coloured person to receive this degree. He then worked as a teacher at St Philip's Primary School. In 1912 he was appointed to be the Principal of Trafalgar Second Class Public School in District Six of Cape Town. In September 1912 he married Caroline Hartog. The following year he announced Rosie Waradea Abdurahman, Abdullah Abdurahman's daughter as the first black girl to finish her schooling at Trafalgar Public School. Cressy continued to study obtaining a T.2 certificate and a School Music Certificate in 1912.

With Dr Abdullah Abdurahman's encouragement, Cressy and H. Gordon founded the Teachers' League of South Africa (TLSA) in 1913. Cressy was elected as President of the League in 1913. He was also selected as the first editor of the Educational Journal formed by the TLSA.

Cressy died from pneumonia on the 23rd August 1916 at the age of 27. His wife Caroline died from the Great Influenza Epidemic in October 1918 leaving behind their daughter Millicent. In his honour, the Cape Town Secondary School was renamed to Harold Cressy High School in 1953. The school was founded in 1951 and it was declared a Provincial Heritage site in 2014.

Scope and content

Most of the material in this collection relates to the life story of Harold Cressy, outlining the issues within the South African education system during apartheid. The collection concentrates on the work done by Cressy to improve the education system and how he himself managed to get an education despite being a coloured man. Cressy founded the Teachers' League of South Africa which was instrumental in reforming the South African education system against the Bantu Education Act which was based on apartheid principals.
